

Claude Opus 4.7 Adaptive

May 19, 2026

Claude finished the response

I need to find a scholarly secondary source, either a monograph or article published by an academic press, that confirms that Luchino Scarampi funded the Count of Armagnac in the late 1380s when the Count of Armagnac invaded the Crown of Aragon. I have found mention of this on Wikipedia (https://ca.wikipedia.org/wiki/Guerra_dels_armanyaguesos) but I really need an academic source for this. Please help me find a mention of a connection between Scarampi and the Count of Armagnac and provide a link to the article or book.

12:05 PM

Excavated academic sources linking Scarampi to Armagnac funding allegations

Excavated academic sources linking Scarampi to Armagnac funding allegations

I found a very promising lead. Let me investigate the most relevant source — an academic article directly about the Scarampi trial.

Assembling comprehensive scholarly response for user inquiry

Assembling comprehensive scholarly response for user inquiry

I have a strong lead. Let me also quickly verify the Ferrer & Vela article, which is the foundational study cited throughout the Tello piece.

Synthesized scholarly sources revealing accusations likely unfounded

Synthesized scholarly sources revealing accusations likely unfounded

I've found exactly what you need, and there's an important historiographical wrinkle worth flagging before you cite this.

The scholarly source

The most direct academic treatment is:

Tello Hernández, Esther. "Era tingut e reputat per bon hom': el proceso contra el mercader Luchino Scarampi en la curia de Aviñón a finales del siglo XIV." Studia Historica. Historia Medieval 40, no. 2 (2022): 193–211.

- DOI: 10.14201/SHHME2022402193211
- Journal (open access): https://revistas.usal.es/uno/index.php/Studia_H_Historia_Medieval/article/view/27416
- Academia.edu (full PDF): <https://www.academia.edu/93765699/>

Published by Ediciones Universidad de Salamanca, peer-reviewed, and by Esther Tello Hernández (IMF-CSIC, Barcelona) — a recognized specialist on Crown of Aragon papal-monarchical finance.

The important caveat — please read this carefully

The Catalan Wikipedia claim you found likely flattens what the scholarship actually says. Tello's article addresses the Scarampi-Armagnac link directly, but dates it to 1396, not the late 1380s, and concludes the accusations were almost certainly false:

"Todo parece indicar que las incriminaciones eran falsas, pero a instancia de la reina Violante comenzó un proceso inquisitorio ordenado por el papa Benedicto XIII."

The actual story: in spring 1396, the Consell de Trenta of Barcelona received reports that Scarampi had deposited 25,000 florins in an Avignon bank to pay 1,000 men-at-arms tied to the Count of Armagnac and the Marquesa of Monferrato for an invasion of the northern Principat. Queen Violant requested an inquisitorial process from Benedict XIII. Tello reconstructs the trial (12–23 May 1396) from AAV, reg. aven. 324, ff. 26r–69r — the testimony of witnesses (including Ramon de Perellós, Cardinal Martín de Zalba, Jaume de Vilagentil, Corrado del Ponte, and Scarampi himself) repeatedly described him as "tingut e reputat per bon hom" and the case collapsed without producing evidence. The proceedings ended abruptly on 23 May 1396, three days after Joan I's death, and folded into the much larger process against the king's former counsellors.

So if your Wikipedia citation is being used to claim Scarampi actually funded Armagnac's 1389–1390 invasion (the Guerra dels armanyaguesos proper), the leading specialist literature does not support that — it describes a 1396 accusation, after the invasion, that scholars now consider unfounded.

Two further sources that may help

The foundational study, cited throughout Tello and the Catalan Wikipedia article, is the 177-page documentary monograph-in-article-form:

Ferrer i Mallol, Maria Teresa, and Carles Vela i Aulesa. "Un mercader italià a la Cort catalanoaragonesa: Luchino Scarampi." Acta Historica et Archaeologica Mediaevalia 32 (2014–2015): 301–478.

Open access on

RACO: <https://www.raco.cat/index.php/ActaHistorica/article/view/188893> — this one includes an extensive documentary appendix that almost certainly contains the chancery letters underlying the Wikipedia claim, so it's where I'd go to track down the original sourcing.

And for an earlier piece on Scarampi's diplomatic role:

Pistarino, Gea. "Luchino Scarampi tra Genova e Barcellona per la pace del 1386." Medioevo. Saggi e Rassegne 1 (1975): 33–47.

Suggested move

If what you actually need is a scholarly source for the Wikipedia claim as stated, the Tello 2022 article is your citation — but you'd want to frame it as "Scarampi was accused of funding Armagnac's companies in 1396, though Tello argues the accusations were unfounded." If you want documentation of actual financial flows behind the 1389–1390 Armagnac invasion specifically, that's a different question, and the Ferrer & Vela apparatus is the place to look first; given your familiarity with the ACA, you'd be well-positioned to follow their reg. citations directly.

The Wikipedia page cites specific pages in a book that relate to the late 1380s. Diversos autors. Història medieval de Catalunya. 2a edició. Edicions de la Universitat Oberta de Catalunya, 2004, p.142-143. [ISBN 84-9788-170-

2](https://ca.wikipedia.org/wiki/Especial:Fonts_bibliogr%C3%A0fiques/84-9788-170-2).

When I searched, the ISBN seemed erroneous and the title had a lot of results, even when restricted to 2004. Since there are specific page numbers cited, I am hoping to somehow confirm this. Can you help me find a link to this book and ideally a preview of those pages?

12:28 PM

Deciphering Wikipedia's medieval Catalan historical citation

Deciphering Wikipedia's medieval Catalan historical citation

Let me check the actual Wikipedia citation directly to see what it says.

Investigated bibliographic discrepancies and verified medieval Catalan history source

Investigated bibliographic discrepancies and verified medieval Catalan history source

I found strong confirmation of the book. Let me check the standard library catalogs for definitive metadata and any digitized copy.

Pursued online search strategy to verify bibliographic source

Pursued online search strategy to verify bibliographic source

Let me check Google Books for any preview of pages 142-143.

Verifying bibliographic details through Spanish National Library catalog

Verifying bibliographic details through Spanish National Library catalog

The "diversos autors" attribution on Wikipedia is suggestive — let me check whether there's a separate UOC course manual (collective work) with that ISBN.

Verified book authenticity and identified ISBN error

Verified book authenticity and identified ISBN error

I've tracked the book down. Here's the situation:

The book exists, but the citation has errors

The Wikipedia entry is referring to:

Aventín, Mercè, and Josep M. Salrach. Història medieval de Catalunya. Barcelona: Edicions de la Universitat Oberta de Catalunya / Proa, 1998 (reimpressió 2004). Biblioteca Oberta "Àgora." 187 pp.

Three problems with the Wikipedia citation worth flagging:

(1) The ISBN is wrong. The actual ISBN is 84-8256-631-8 (long form: 978-84-8256-631-3), a Proa imprint number. The "84-9788-" prefix on Wikipedia belongs to Editorial UOC's standalone ISBN range and does not match this co-imprint. Library catalogs (Biblioteca Víctor Balaguer, Dialnet, Casa del Libro, AbeBooks, Casa del Libro, IHE) all give 84-8256-631-8.

(2) "Diversos autors" is wrong. The book has two named authors: Mercè Aventín i Puig and Josep M. Salrach i Marès (the latter, a major Catalan medievalist who passed away in April 2025). A Wikipedia editor seems to have generalized.

(3) The "2a edició" is technically a reimpressió (reprint). Per the Índice Histórico Español review (item 04-417 in vol. 04), the 2004 issue is "Reimpresión de la edición de 1998. Manual divulgativo, aunque riguroso y completo... Sin notas. Bibliografía esencial." That's a single sentence worth pausing on, for your purposes:

A more substantive problem for your research

The book has no footnotes. It's a survey textbook for general readers and UOC distance-learning students, with only an "essential bibliography" at the end. So even when you do get to pp. 142–143 (which by page count would land squarely in the late-fourteenth-century material on Joan I), it will assert the Scarampi-as-shared-creditor claim without telling you where the claim comes from. The Wikipedia editor cited a tertiary source, in other words.

The claim itself ("creditor del comte i del rei fos el mateix Luchino Scarampi") almost certainly traces back through Aventín/Salrach to one of: Marina Mitjà's "Procés contra els consellers domèstics i curials de Joan I, entre ells Bernat Metge" (Butlletí de la Reial Acadèmia de Bones Lletres de Barcelona 27 [1958]: 375–417); or Ferrer i Mallol's earlier work on Joan I; or the Gran Enciclopèdia Catalana article on the Guerra dels armanyaguesos. Tello (2022, the article I sent you previously) cites Mitjà's Procés for exactly the kind of malversation/credit accusations that this claim invokes. If you can find Mitjà in print, that's likely the chain — and the Ferrer & Vela 2014–15 documentary apparatus on Scarampi will give you the chancery citations themselves.

Where to access the book

No Google Books preview is available; nothing on Internet Archive that I can find. Your best options:

- Dialnet record (metadata only): <https://dialnet.unirioja.es/servlet/libro?codigo=149875>
- Biblioteca Víctor Balaguer catalog entry: <https://cataleg.victorbalaguer.cat/cgi-bin/koha/opac-detail.pl?biblionumber=20822>
- WorldCat: search "Història medieval de Catalunya Aventín Salrach" — many U.S. academic libraries hold it
- Used copies: AbeBooks/Iberlibro has it from ~€19–€177 depending on seller

For your purposes — and I say this as a research-economy point, not a discouragement — the Aventín/Salrach text is unlikely to give you anything citable beyond what the Catalan Wikipedia already paraphrases. If your dissertation argument needs a footnotable academic source for "the court suspected Scarampi was creditor to both the king and Armagnac," the citable chain runs through Mitjà 1958 → Ferrer & Vela 2014–15 → Tello 2022. The Aventín/Salrach textbook is just a tertiary echo. I'd suggest the ILL effort go to Mitjà if you don't already have it.

pdf

I do have a copy of the 1958 Mitjà article. I am attaching it here. Can you search through it to find any connection to the Count of Armagnac in 1388 or 1387?

12:37 PM

Excavated Armagnac references and assessed Scarampi's direct involvement

Excavated Armagnac references and assessed Scarampi's direct involvement

I've gone carefully through the Mitjà document — yes, there's an Armagnac reference, and it's directly relevant to your Wikipedia claim, though with an important qualification.

What's in Mitjà 1958

There are two distinct Armagnac references in the document, in two different parts of the interrogatory:

(1) The Monzón Cortes accusation — the one you care about

In the general interrogatory (the set of questions put to ALL the accused collectively), this charge appears:

"Interrogat si sab ne ha oyt dir que a tracte de algun o alguns dels desus dits com lo dit senyor celebra les corts generals prop passades en la vila de Mutço fosen entrades les companyes d'En Bernat d'Armenyach en la senyoria del dit senyor per ço que les dites corts no vinguessen en algun acabament."

Translation: "Asked whether he knows or has heard that, at the instigation of one or more of the above-mentioned [accused], when the lord [king] held the recent General Courts in the town of Monzón, the companies of Bernat d'Armanyac entered the lord's dominion so that those Courts should not come to any conclusion."

This is your 1388 Armagnac connection. The Cortes "prop passades" in Mutço/Montsó are the Courts of Monzón of 1388–89, which famously failed to conclude. And the list of "desus dits" — the accused enumerated immediately before in the general list — includes Luquí Scarampo by name, alongside Esperandeu Cardona, Julià Garrius, Bernat Metge, the Mestre de Montesa, and the rest.

(2) The May 1396 Avignon accusation — specifically against Scarampi

In Scarampi's individual interrogatory (the section headed "Contra micer Loqui Scarampol"), only the later accusation appears:

"Interrogat si sab o ha hoyt dir que 1 dit micer Loqui, a tracte de algu en lo mes de maig de 1 any present sia stat en Avinyo per dar sou o fer entrar gent d armes per correr, guarrejar e dapnificar los regnes e terres del dit senyor."

This is the 1396 charge that Tello's 2022 article reconstructs in detail.

The qualification — and why this matters for your citation chain

The 1388 Armagnac-instigation charge is in the general interrogatory, directed at the whole group of "consellers, domèstics, curials e officials" of Joan I. Mitjà's edition does not single Scarampi out for it in his own individual interrogatory — the questions Scarampi was personally asked are about (a) the Mallorca/Sardinia tithes contract and (b) the May 1396 Avignon affair.

So the Wikipedia phrasing — "la cort, desconfiada que el creditor del comte i del rei fos el mateix Luchino Scarampi" — represents an interpretive inference from the accusations rather than a direct quotation from the 1396 trial. The trial accused the king's circle, including Scarampi by name in the master list, of having instigated the 1388 Armagnac entry to derail the Monzón Cortes. Reading that together with what was independently known about Scarampi's role as one of Joan I's principal creditors, one can plausibly arrive at the formulation "the Cort suspected that the same Scarampi was creditor to both king and count" — but that exact claim is not in Mitjà 1958. It's a reasonable historiographic gloss, not a direct quotation.

Practical upshot for your work

If you want to cite a primary-source-grounded link between Scarampi and the 1388–90 Armagnac invasion, Mitjà 1958 gives you what you need, but you'd want to frame it carefully — something like: "In the inquisitorial process of 1396 against Joan I's former counsellors and officials, the general charges included an accusation that 'at the instigation of one or more' of the accused — a group that named Scarampi explicitly — the companies of Bernat d'Armanyac had entered Catalonia during the Cortes of Montsó of 1388 to prevent the Courts from reaching a conclusion (Mitjà 1958, p. 386)." That gives you the documentary basis without overclaiming.

The "creditor of both king and count" framing that Wikipedia uses almost certainly comes from Ferrer & Vela's 2014–15 synthesis or from the Gran Enciclopèdia Catalana, where someone has interpreted the 1396 accusations plus what's known about Scarampi's documented financial role to produce the synthetic claim. If you want that exact framing footnoted, Ferrer & Vela remains your best bet — they had access to the documentary apparatus and would have been writing knowing both Mitjà and the ACA registers Scarampi appears in.

One small bonus from the document for your dissertation: the trial's witness/accused list is a fascinating cross-section of the Joan I–Violant inner circle, and Mitjà gives you the full Catalan text of the interrogatories with all their ACA reg. citations (ACA reg. 2273, fol. 128v ff.) — useful if you ever need to consult the original.

What about the proceedings of the Monzón Cortes? Are those available in full-text anywhere online? If so, would those include references to Scarampi?

12:41 PM

Locating full Monzón Cortes transcription in Biblioteca Virtual de Aragón

Locating full Monzón Cortes transcription in Biblioteca Virtual de Aragón

I found the critical resource — the modern critical edition of the Monzón 1388 Cortes is available online. Let me verify.

Located full-text Cortes proceedings and contemplated Scarampi's likely appearance

Located full-text Cortes proceedings and contemplated Scarampi's likely appearance

The full critical edition is available online. Let me check the persons index to see if Scarampi appears there.

Traced document availability and evaluated Scarampi's likely appearance

Traced document availability and evaluated Scarampi's likely appearance

Yes — and the resource is excellent.

The proceedings are available in full

The authoritative modern critical edition of the 1388–89 Monzón Cortes (Aragonese side) is:

Sesma Muñoz, José Ángel (ed.). Acta Curiarum Regni Aragonum. Tomo V. Cortes de los reinados de Pedro IV/4 y Juan I. Zaragoza: Ibercaja / Cortes de Aragón / Gobierno de Aragón / Grupo CEMA, 2009.

The full volume is freely available as a PDF through the Biblioteca Virtual de Aragón. The navigation page is at <https://dara.aragon.es/opac/doma/actas05.jsp>, and within the digitized volume:

- The 1388–89 Monzón Cortes transcription begins at p. 334 of the PDF
- The Index of persons and places is at p. 544 — search there first

For the Catalan-side proceedings of the same joint Cortes, you'd want the older Real Academia de la Historia series, Cortes de los antiguos reinos de Aragón y de Valencia y principado de Cataluña (Madrid, 1896–1922), 26 volumes covering the Cortes de Cataluña. The relevant volume for Joan I would be Tomo IV (which is what Mitjà cited for the 1396 Regency Council material at pp. 252–255). The whole series is digitized on Internet Archive (the Toronto/Canada Council set, beginning at <https://archive.org/details/cortesdelosantig15arag> and variants) and at the Biblioteca Virtual Miguel de Cervantes.

Would Scarampi appear?

Likely yes, but with important qualifications. I haven't been able to fetch the index directly to verify, so this is an empirical question you can answer in a few minutes by opening the PDF and using Ctrl-F. Search for: "Scaramp" (will catch Scarampi/Scarampo/Scarampol), "Loqui" or "Luqui" (the Catalan/Aragonese form of Luchino used in the chancery), and "Asti" (his city of origin, often used to identify him as "lo mercader d'Asti").

The reasons to expect a hit:

The Cortes of 1388–89 turned on exactly the issues Scarampi was tied up in — Joan I's catastrophic indebtedness, the role of his Italian financiers, the demand from the brazos that he dismiss his "mals consellers," and the question of whether to fund the response to the Armagnac threat. The accusatory framework that surfaces explicitly in the 1396 trial (the Mitjà document) is largely a retrospective elaboration of complaints first voiced in these Cortes. Specific lenders' names often do appear in Cortes proceedings when their loans were being discussed — censal contracts, assignments on royal revenues, and so forth.

Reasons for caution: the Aragonese-side proceedings (which is what Sesma Muñoz edits) might handle the corrupt-counsellors complaint more generically than the Catalan side did, since Scarampi was Barcelona-based and most active in Catalonia. If you find nothing in the Aragonese volume, the Catalan-side proceedings in the Real Academia series are the more likely place for a hit. The Ferrer & Vela 2014–15 article should also have specific Cortes citations in their documentary apparatus — I'd check their footnotes around the 1388 material before doing your own search, since they may have already done this work.

One more practical note

The chancery Catalan spelling of Scarampi's name varies considerably across documents — Mitjà's transcription uses "Luquí Scarampo," "Loqui Scarampol," and "micer Loqui," all referring to the same person. If your initial search comes up empty, try the variants and also try fragments ("Loquí," "Luqui," "Scarampol," "Escarampoll"). The Sesma Muñoz edition normalizes transcription somewhat but preserves manuscript spellings in most cases.

If you do find Scarampi by name in the Cortes proceedings, that's significantly stronger evidence for the "creditor to both" claim than what the 1396 inquisition gives you on its own — because it would be roughly contemporary documentation of the brazos' concern, not retrospective accusation by his enemies. Worth the half-hour to check.

Want to be notified when Claude responds?

Claude is AI and can make mistakes. Please double-check cited sources.